Location

Situated in west-central Scotland, Paisley lies 7 miles (11 km) west of Glasgow, on the banks of the White Cart Water, a tributary of the River Clyde. It's part of the Glasgow City Region, benefiting from proximity to Scotland's largest city and excellent transport links, including four railway stations, the M8 motorway, and Glasgow Airport just minutes away

Paisley's economy has evolved from its 19th-century dominance in textiles—where it became a global leader in thread production and shawl manufacturing—to modern sectors like whisky blending, bottling, and services. Key strengths include its strategic location within Scotland's economic powerhouse region, accounting for a significant share of national GVA, jobs, and businesses. The town boasts the second-highest concentration of listed buildings in Scotland, supporting a vibrant cultural and heritage scene that drives tourism. Recent recognition as Scotland's Town of the Year in 2025 highlights its resurgence through cultural regeneration and investment. A Business Improvement District with over 600 businesses fosters local commerce, while the university presence adds educational and innovative capacity.

With £100 million in high street regeneration funding, Paisley is poised for reinvention, focusing on retail revival amid challenges like online shopping and out-of-town parks. Opportunities lie in leveraging its industrial legacy for tech and creative industries, as
